Introduction

What part did the vicar of East Meon play in the passing of the 1836 Tithe Commutation Act? A year before, an Act for the Tithing of Turnips had rejected a demand by the Reverend Thomas Cooke Kemp for a 20% increase in the tithes paid by farmers, claiming that turnips grubbed up for feeding livestock should be included. At a time when agricultural communities were economically depressed, and when the Anglican church was in decline, the owner of Bereleigh estate, Captain Samuel G. Pechell RN, had resisted the claim, and Kemp had successfully sued him in the Court of Exchequer. Members of East Meon History Group [EMHG] have studied the history of tithes through the prism of this Hampshire parish¹. Seventeenth century Manorial Rolls and Indentures show the appropriation by secular landowners of rectorial tithes following the Restoration, while court records and Hansard have helped reconstruct the political tussles of the early nineteenth. Data from the 1851 Census Enumerator Books [CEBs] with East Meon's Tithe Apportionments [TAs] have been combined to reveal who received tithes, how much farmers paid and, and the vicar's income from tithes. We conclude that the Reverend Kemp's demands for extra tithes made a small but timely contribution to the passage of the controversial 1836 Tithe Commutation Act.

¹ In 2016, EMHG has embarked on a project to research the history of Agriculture in the parish. Contributions made by members are acknowledged in footnotes.

Previous history of tithes in East Meon

Fig 3 The 17th century barn at The Court House, which probably replaced an earlier barn for the collection of crops harvested for the manor, or greater tithes, or both, in which case, they would have been kept strictly separate.

To understand the reputation of tithes in 19th century East Meon, we need to step back a thousand years. East Meon had probably been a Minster in Saxon times and then a substantial Hundred including the tithings of Steep, Froxfield, Langrish, Ramsdean, Oxenbourne, Bordean, Riplington and Coomb². Domesday records 'Mene Hundred' belonging to Archbishop Stigand, then Bishop of both Canterbury and Winchester; and for a thousand years the Bishops of Winchester were Lords of the Manors and rectors of the parish³.¹ From the 11th century it consisted of two manors, 'East Meon' of about 20,000 acres and 'East Meon Ecclesia', 750 acres, entirely surrounded by the larger manor. The Winchester Pipe Rolls for the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries record the rent paid and the produce of land farmed by tenants, and also of land farmed 'in demesne'⁴. The Bishops also received the 'greater tithes', a tenth of all corn, barley and wheat grown by tenants, of livestock and of tradesmen's earnings. Both manorial produce and greater tithes were deposited in the barn in the grounds of The Court House⁵. The present barn (left) was built in the seventeenth century. Edward Roberts, architectural historian, says it could have been a manorial or great tithe barn, or both. The vicar subsisted on one-tenth of ceremonies performed for parishioners throughout the parish⁶. His benefice might also have included a small stipend. Throughout the Middle Ages, monasteries and secular landowners appropriated many benefices, followed by the Dissolution of the Monasteries when ‘all their landed assets and appropriated churches passed to the crown and when almost half the parishes in this land passed to the laity’⁷. The diocese of Winchester, however, remained intact until the seventeenth century, when the whole system of tithing came under fire.

In 1618, the polymath John Seldon had published his History of Tithes in which he highlighted the anachronism that tithes were subject to canon law, despite the number of lay appropriators the book was withdrawn but the debate had been kindled⁸. In 1640, Parliament acted against ecclesiastical courts and in 1641 it approved the second reading of a bill for ‘the utter abolishing and taking away of all archbishops, bishops....’⁹ In 1645 An Indictment of Tithes hoped that ‘it will now appear no more strange to abolish tithes.... than it hath been to abolish episcopacy, prelacy and common prayer’¹⁰. First during the Rump (1649 – 1653), and then Barebone’s (1653) Parliaments, debates raged between established churchmen who believed tithes should be maintained, moderates, led by John Owen, who proposed reform of tithes, and radicals, led by John Canne, who demanded abolition: only political manoeuvres and knife-edge votes prevented their total abolition¹¹. Owen’s committee on tithes did pass a scheme ‘for the appointment of commissioners to eject ignorant and scandalous clergymen’: 2,425 benefices were sequestered and their vicars replaced with more Puritan clergy¹². East Meon's vicar, John Shrigley, was lucky to escape. In March 1644, the Parliamentary Army had encamped in the parish; the more zealous of its members stripped the church and Court House of any 'idolatry' which had survived previous purges¹³. After three days, 12,000 men marched through the village on their way to the battle of Cheriton. Their departure must have been a relief to Shrigley who had been appointed two years earlier by the Bishop of Winchester, Walter Curle, a Royalist and a fervent supporter of Archbishop Laud¹⁴. Shrigley was lucky to escape the 'fines, imprisonment and sequestration' which befell many clergy still using the prayer book rights¹⁵. (Perhaps he was among the group described by the Puritan Richard Baxter, who wrote: 'when Parliament purged the ministry, they cast out the grosser sort of insufficient and scandalous ones, and gross drunkards and such like; and some few civil men that had resisted in the wars against the Parliament, or set up bowing to altars, and such innovations: but they had left in near one half the ministers, that were not good enough to do much service, nor bad enough to be cast out as utterly intolerable: these were a company of poor weak preachers, that had no great skill in divinity, nor zeal for godliness; but prered weakly that which is true and lived in no gross notorious sin: these men were not cast out, but yet their people greatly needed help; for their dark sleepy preaching did but little good')¹⁶. Despite the fact that its vicar escaped sequestration, East Meon would have been exposed to dissenting preachers, although there is no documentary evidence: the second oldest Friends' Meeting House in the world was built in the nearby town of Alton, and is still in use. Ambrose Rigge, a national preacher who spearheaded the evangelisation of southern England, was arrested on a road near neighbouring Petersfield and his travels would have taken him through the village¹⁷. The greatest effect, however, of the Commonwealth and Restoration was on the ownership of East Meon's land.

Land ownership and tithe appropriation

The Commonwealth and subsequent Restoration saw dramatic changes in the ownership of land in East Meon and of tithes. Firstly, following the 1645 Bill for the Sale of Episcopal Lands, the Diocese was stripped of the manors.¹⁸ Court and South Farms were sold to Parliamentary supporters Nathaniel Hallowes (a Derby MP) and Richard Dannald respectively¹⁹. In 1649 the manors, including over three hundred tenancies, were bought by Francis Allen MP, a contentious and wealthy London goldsmith-financier; as Army Treasurer he had made financial arrangements for Charles I's execution. Upon the Restoration of Charles II in 1660, the Bishop was reinstated as Lord of the manors, but the land was leased to Sir Stephen Fox, who had managed Charles' finances in exile and had negotiated the king's return to England²⁰. Fox, MP for Salisbury, sub-let the farms to local farmers: in 1662 he sold South Farm to a London doctor²¹. Annual renewals of his (tithe-free) tenancy of Court Farm and House are recorded in the manorial rolls²². The Diocese now started selling its rectorial tithes: a 1661 indenture records the appropriation by one secular landowner, James Sessions, of tithes for Steep²³. As John Spurr writes, 'little is known of lay improPRIATORS as a class ... no systematic or central record was kept and the practice of leasing tithes further complicates the

A church in decline

When Thomas Cooke Kemp was inducted as vicar of East Meon in 1826, the role of the Anglican vestry was diminishing throughout England. As Kate Tiller writes: 'the old parish system had depended on unpaid, annually elected local officers who were now faced with rapidly increasing populations of people who were more mobile and included larger proportions of poor'²⁸.²⁹ New legislation transferred civic duties from the vestry to district government: the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1834 closed village workhouses and paupers were moved to 'cost-effective' Union workhouses in nearby towns: East Meon's paupers were transferred to the Petersfield workhouse when it was opened in 1835³⁰. Police Reform Acts saw parish constables replaced by officers appointed by County Constabularies: supervision of highways and bridges to Turnpike Trusts³¹. As Owen Chadwick writes, 'the removal of the secular business left the vestry without life'³². The behaviour of some clergy hastened the decline of the church's reputation. As Norman Pounds wrote: 'many pastors were non-resident, and some antagonised their parishioners by their rapacious collection of tithes. ... they lived a life of ease on the profits of several benefices, while underpaid curates and chaplains did their work. These were the 'fat cats' of the clerical profession ... who received in full the tithes from rich farmland'³³. William Cobbett railed against the system, and idle, rich vicars were Anthony Trollope's favourite target, from the Barsetshire Chronicles to *The Claverings*³⁴. Not surprisingly, many parishioners turned to Nonconformist religions, whose hostility to tithes was deep-rooted. In 1788, the vicar of East Meon, Reverend Boisdaune, had responded to the Bishop's standard enquiry about Dissenters: 'There is nothing of the kind in any of the parishes'³⁵. By 1851, the Religious Census lists half a dozen Nonconformist chapels in all, and the 1869 Ordnance Survey map shows another Primitive Methodist chapel in the village (Fig 11 & Table 1)³⁶. More than a quarter of the Anglican congregation had deserted, an exodus caused both by the church's declining reputation and by the behaviour of Thomas Cooke Kemp.

The Reverend Thomas Cooke Kemp

Kemp had been born in 1787, the son of a Norfolk farmer, and studied at Caius College, Cambridge. His wife Jane was the daughter of Robert Pretymán, a wealthy south Norfolk landowner: she was born in Brockdish, close to the family home of the illustrious George Pretymán who had been first tutor, then close friend and private secretary of William Pitt the Younger.

Through Pitt's patronage Pretymán was successively Bishop of Lincoln, Chichester, and finally of Winchester (when Thomas Kemp was inducted as vicar of All Saints, East Meon, in 1826). Pretymán's distant relative Marmaduke Tomline, had made him his heir on condition he changed his surname to Tomline; from a further bequest, he acquired several farms in Suffolk which had originally belonged to the Pretymán family (Fig 12).³⁷ George Pretymán Tomline died in 1827 leaving an estate worth £200,000, or £18 million in today's money³⁸.

There is no direct evidence of Jane's relationship with the great man, but coincidences of surname, proximity of birthplace, and patronage make it likely³⁹. In 1826 Kemp was 39 years old and East Meon appears to have been his first incumbency. He was soon engulfed in scandal. In 1827 a living-in servant, Elizabeth Welch, made an allegation of 'molestation' against him and he accused her of defamation of character. Judgment was given against Welch at a consistory court sitting at Steep, but, significantly, Kemp was obliged to pay costs⁴⁰. Appendix 4 has excerpts from the trial, in which Welch is very explicit about Kemp's behaviour ('entered the bedroom of myself and fellow servant, undressed, got into the bed') and where, although found guilty, her sentence was conspicuously lenient. The case can hardly have endeared him to his parish. He had already initiated the action which took the two men first to court and subsequently to the House of Commons; Kemp had evidently decided that his benefice was insufficient for the upkeep of the church building, his family of two sons and two daughters, and the salaries of two curates^{41, 42}.

Kemp had evidently decided that his benefice was insufficient for the upkeep of the church building, his family of two sons and two daughters, and the salaries of two curates⁴³. Unlike his predecessor, John Docker, who looked after the chapelries of Steep and Froxfield on his own, Kemp employed curates, one of them Edmund Docker, the son of his predecessor⁴⁴. He planned to build a new vicarage (Fig 13), and must have persuaded the Diocese to meet the cost. Upon his arrival, he had observed that farmers did not pay tithes on the 'Swedish turnips' they cultivated to feed livestock. Cobbett had noted that 'The greens will have helped put the latest cabbages to carry you through November, and perhaps into December, but for these six months you must depend on Swedish turnips⁴⁵. Farmers hoed them up, working their way across the field, moving hurdles to contain the sheep. Kemp claimed that they should pay additional tithes for these turnips. Pechell refused, and in 1833 the vicar sued him.

A farming community.

Pechell said he fought the case on behalf of all East Meon farmers⁴⁶. This was a wholly agricultural community; the 1841 CEB demonstrates the extent to which its workforce was employed in farming or related trades and services (Tables B & C).

Every occupation in the parish supported agriculture in some way; teachers organised the school year around the agricultural seasons; the police officer would have prosecuted mainly rural crimes, and so on⁴⁷. The end of the Napoleonic Wars had flooded the countryside with demobbed soldiers seeking employment, at a time when the country's population was doubling⁴⁸. New machinery and farming methods further threatened the livelihoods of agricultural labourers; in response, Swing rioters set out to destroy the new threshing machines and to burn tithe barns; between sixty and seventy of these disturbances 'seem to have centred around the tithe payments'⁴⁹.⁵⁰ The riots came very close to East Meon: in November 1830 John Bonham Carter JP received a frantic letter from a fellow magistrate describing riots in nearby

Headley and Selborne, asking for reinforcements from Petersfield. Another letter, from the Keeper of Winchester County Gaol, asked him not to send any more prisoners: ‘there being already 53 in custody and in the course of an hour I expect 50 more’⁵¹. In attempting to increase tithes, Kemp was playing a dangerous game.

In order to understand better who paid tithes, and who benefited (and in particular, how much the vicar received), we need to go forward two decades to a time when more detailed records than were available than the 1830s: the 1851 CEB and the 1851/2 Tithe Apportionments survey which implemented the Tithe Commutation Act by calculating the cash value of tithes paid in kind⁵². The TAs list the size and value of every field, cottage, coppice and waste patch, their owners and occupiers, acreage and value, and tithes paid ‘where applicable’. (Table D, separate file). The cost of living in the 1850s was no higher than in the 1830s, when corn prices were depressed, so we do not need to allow for inflation⁵³. We have linked East Meon’s TAs to CEB data to identify, firstly, who owned land in East Meon at the time, and how much they farmed; Table F lists 25 farmers of whom 15 paid tithes, (on whose behalf Pechell fought the Tithing of Turnips)⁵⁴.

⁵⁴ Those designated as ‘owner’ were responsible for paying tithes, where applicable, and all are described in the CEBs as farmers, sometimes alongside other occupations (magistrate, Draper, Publican. Most would, in fact, have rented their land from the large landowners, listed as ‘lessees’, in that they leased the land from the Bishop of Winchester. Where ‘owner’ and ‘occupier’ are different, we have designated the ‘owner’ as the farmer, due to pay the tithes where applicable.

Table G shows the six large landowners who ‘hold a lease of the said Tithes arising from or accruing due upon the Titheable lands’, whose predecessors had appropriated the tithes and who probably sided with the Vicar in defending the system⁵⁶. A third group of farms is described by the Commissioner as ‘exempt from the payment of all Tithes’ – Court, Fairfield (or South), Hiden (now Hyden, 227 acres), Park (441 acres) and Church Farms (553 acres). Finally, he comes to the Vicar’s tithes.

And whereas I find that the Vicar of the being is entitled to all the Tithes both Great and Small arising from or accruing Lands within the Tythings of Westbury Peake and Comb in the said parish. Of the Tithes other than the Tithes of Corn, Grain, Lamb, Wool, Wood and Apples arising upon all the other Titheable Lands of the said parish.

The Commissioner awarded the Vicar the tithes, 'great and small', from Westbury, Peak and Comb, and all lesser tithes, amounting to £680 per annum⁵⁷. He was also entitled to 'Tithes of Hops' at the rate of 13/4d per acre: 33.48 acres of hops yielded £21. 15s. He was also apportioned tithes of £230 from each of the chapelries at Steep and Froxfield⁵⁸ (Table H). Using the Bank of England Inflation calculator, the vicar's receipts from tithes in 1852 were £232,830 in today's money⁵⁹. His outgoings were apparently modest; his two curates would have been paid between £70 and £100 a year: (Trollope writes that Clavering's curate, Mr Saul, who aspired to marry the vicar's daughter, 'for this accommodation he paid £10, per annum. He then had £60 left': Cobbett writes of another Hampshire curate that his salary 'does not, perhaps, exceed seventy or a hundred pounds')⁶⁰. Kemp was spending around a third of the income he received in tithes from the two chapelries on curatorial salaries. Nor does he appear to have maintained the church and chapels; in 1669 his successor, Reverend William Brodie, had to commission the well-known architect Ewen Christian to restore All Saints extensively, inside and out.⁶¹

The national stage

The vicar filed his case against Pechell in 1831 (Fig 13) and it was heard in the Hall of Lincoln's Inn Fields on August 3rd 1833 by the Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer⁶⁴. Lord Lyndhurst (Fig 16) was a notable politician and a brilliant lawyer but inclined to jump to conclusions⁶⁵. He found that 'there was no dispute that turnips were titheable as predial small tithes, as crops', that it was sufficient that they had been severed from the land, and that it was 'not impracticable' to retain every 10th turnip⁶⁶. Pechell's lawyers evidently regarded the verdict as unjust and 'only' billed him £100.10s.6d.⁶⁷ Pechell's total bill for the court case was £318.8s.11d, (£63,680 in 2015 values⁶⁸). He decided to take his cause to a higher level.

Samuel Pechell's brother Richard (Fig 18), another naval captain, was elected to Parliament in 1834; Hansard for 19th June 1835 records that 'Captain Pechell, MP, rose pursuant to present a Petition from Capt Samuel G Pechell Esq ... complaining of the vexatious proceeding of his vicar ... praying for a speedy commutation of Tithes ... He did not intend any censure on the clergy generally, but to show the necessity of altering the present law of Tithes⁶⁹. Pechell was referring to the long-running resistance by the Church of England to reform of Tithes. Since 1829, Parliament had received numerous petitions calling, first, for the introduction of long leases, and then for commutation from payment in kind to cash⁷⁰. Two weeks earlier, a similar petition had been promoted, following a case heard at the Spiritual Court at Litchfield; a Staffordshire rector, the Rev. Bernard Port, had made claims for tithes on cabbages pulled to feed cattle. In this debate, Arthur Trevor MP had spoken against that petition and Captain Pechell had spoken in favour; Mr Richards MP had complained that 'his Majesty's Ministers proposed to delay the Commutation of Tithes for another Session, perhaps sine die...' That petition had been successful.⁷¹ Richard Pechell described that, in 1826, 'The Rev Thomas Kemp had entered on the vicarage, and immediately gave notice that all compositions for tithes should cease ...': his brother's composition at the time, 'stood at £19.9s 6d though only valued at £11.19s. which composition however he was still willing to continue to the new vicar, knowing how essential it was to keep on a good footing with the clergyman ... as being a Magistrate for the common benefit of society. The reverend Gentleman however refused the old composition and actually proposed an increase of 20 per cent, which was of course refused by the whole parish⁷².' Pechell criticised Lord Lyndhurst's ruling: "Chief Baron Lyndhurst said the turnips might be pecked in the rear of the fold, but not in advance of it. Now was there ever anything so absurd as this and so very injurious to the system of turnip cultivation?⁷³' Pechell mentions 'the hon. Member for Durham (Mr. A. Trevor)', who had also attacked the Staffordshire petition; he said Trevor acted as 'conduit pipe for conveying the opinions of the clergy, to shew how this was to be effected⁷⁴'. Arthur Trevor MP, later Viscount Dungannon, had also vigorously opposed the Reform bills of 1831–2, against which 21 out of 26 Bishops had voted⁷⁵. Trevor duly inveighed 'against these attacks on the clergy in general as most unjust and undeserved. It was the duty of the Government to release the clergy from these annoyances, by securing to them a fair provision'⁷⁶. The petition was allowed to 'lie on the Table', and an Act entitled 'Tithing of Turnips Severed from the Ground' was passed two months later. Pechell concluded by saying that he trusted 'that this petition would be the means of drawing the attention of the House to this branch of the subject when the Tithe Bill came before it.' Two months later, the Bill 'for the amendment of the Law as to the Tithing of Turnips' was passed, and a year after that, the Tithes Commutation Act received Royal Assent.

Conclusion

Samuel Pechell said he was resisting the Tithing of Turnips on behalf of East Meon's agricultural community but was also representing all the nation's farmers; the Reverend Kemp, similarly, was acting for the whole Anglican church, whose reputation, we have seen, was at a low ebb and which had resisted the Tithe Commutation Act for half a decade. Eric Evans writes: 'Tithe was hopelessly anachronistic in an increasingly urban society ... the Act sliced through its contradictions and complexities ... No longer could a farmer's budget be upset by a demand from the titheman or by an attack on an ancient customary payment.'⁷⁷ As we have seen, the Tithe Apportionments which resulted from the Act made it possible for the first time properly to understand the state of tithing in communities such as East Meon, and the substantial income which its vicar received. Samuel Pechell died in 1840 and his family moved to Alton; Kemp died at the age of 80 in October 1867, which was the year in which Froxfield and Steep became separate parishes, bringing an end to East Meon 'ownership' of these tithings⁷⁸. Although Kemp's burial appears in the church register, there is today no sign of his gravestone in All Saints' churchyard⁷⁹. During his forty one year incumbency, he had taken his parish briefly onto the national stage and had played a small part, albeit unsuccessful, in defending the system of tithes which had survived for a thousand years. He also served to confirm the fictitious portrayals by Trollope and the political tracts of Cobbett by demonstrating just how much wealth the system could bestow on an undistinguished rural vicar. At a time when agricultural communities were fighting for survival, East Meon could hardly have had a less suitable pastor.

Swing Riots, Letter from Henry Budd JP to John Bonham Carter JP

HRO 94M72/F16 Headed 'Labourers Rising of November 1830'

It is true that the mob have destroyed the Poor House at Headley this day and have insisted on Mr Dickinson's signing a letter to reduce his tithe to £350 a year. They then left Kingsley and proceeded to Kingsley with intent to destroy the threshing machine of Sir T Miller. Yesterday they burnt the Poor House at Selborne with all poor Harrison's furniture and wearing apparel and threatened to murder his family which Mrs Dowling at the Anchor at Liphook has informed me are in her house and it is said that the people mean to come over tomorrow and have them or destroy the house. I have therefore stationed the soldiers there for their protection and beg you so send me a reinforcement as speedily as possible. I have taken the evidence of a man to whom the fellows taken away from home by Dr Quarrier yesterday said "If they do not give you all you want, let us go in and kill them and destroy the house."

Note the demand that tithes be reduced. Headley and Selborne are five and eight miles to the north of East Meon, so the Swing Riots were very close. There are several more letters in the bundle of correspondence with John Bonham Carter, concluding with one from J. Beckett, Keeper of the County Gaol, Winchester asking not to have any more sent to Gaol 'There being already 53 in custody and in the course of an hour I expect 50 more. They are sending prisoners from all quarters'.

Number III, Hurstbourne Tarrant (called Uphusband) Hants 13th October 1826

65. This village was in former times a very considerable place, as is manifest from the size of the church as well as from various other circumstances. It is now, as a church living united with an adjoining parish, called Vernon Dean, which also has its church, at a distance of about three miles from the church of this parish. Both parishes put together now contain only eleven hundred, and a few odd, inhabitants, men women children and all; and yet the great tithes are supposed to be worth two or three thousand a year, and the small tithes about six hundreds a year. Formerly, before the event which is called 'The Reformation', there were two Roman Catholic priests living in the parsonage houses in these two parishes. They could not marry, and could therefore have no wives and families to keep out of the tithes; and WITH PART OF THESE TITHES, THEY, AS THE LAW PROVIDED, MAINTAINED THE POOR OF THESE TWO PARISHES; and, the canons of the church commanded them to distribute the portion to the poor and the stranger, 'with their own hands, in humility and mercy'.

66. This, as to church and poor, was the state of these villages, in the 'dark ages' of 'Romish superstition'. What! No poor-laws? No poor-rates? What horribly unenlightened times! No select vestries? Dark ages indeed. But, how stand these matters now? Why, the two parishes are moulded into one church living. Then, the Great Tithes (amounting to two or three thousand a year) belong to some part of the Chapter (as they call it) of Salisbury. The Chapter leases them out, as they would a house or a farm, and they are now rented by John King, who is one of this happy nation's greatest and oldest pensioners. So that, away go the great tithes, not leaving a single wheat-ear to be spent in the parish. The Small Tithes belong to a Vicar, who is one Fisher, a nephew of the late bishop of Salisbury, who has not resided here for a long while; and who has a curate, John Gale, who being the son of a little farmer and shop-keeper at Burbage in Wiltshire, was by a parson of the name of Bailey (very well known and remembered in these parts) put to school and, in the fulness of time, became a curate. So, that, away go the small tithes (amounting to about 500l/. or 600l/. a year); and, out of the large church revenues; or, rather, large church-and-poor revenues, of these two parishes; out of the whole of them, there remains only the amount of the curate, Mr John Gale's, salary, which does not, perhaps, exceed seventy or a hundred pounds: away goes, as I say, all the rest of the small tithes, leaving not so much as a mess of milk or a dozen eggs, much less a tithe-pig, to be consumed in the parish.

'... about eleven o'clock at night my master' meaning and intending the said Thomas Cooke Kemp' entered the Bed Room of myself and fellow servant undressed, he (meaning and intending the said Thomas Cooke Kemp) go into the bed (meaning and intending the Bed in which the said Elizabeth Welch and her said fellow servant) were lying and being and effected his (meaning &c ... Thomas Cook Kemp's) purpose first on me and then on my fellow servant'. And the party purportent doth allege and propound everything in this Article contained jointly and severally.

That the said Elizabeth Welch hath oftentimes at least once since affirming and uttering the defamatory words mentioned in the next foregoing Article owned and confessed that she spoke the said defamatory words as in the next preceding Article is set forth and the party proponent doth allege and propound as before.

That by the speaking of the said defamatory words the food name and reputation of the said Thomas Cooke Kemp is much hurt, injured and aggrieved among his neighbours, acquaintance and others and this was and is true public and notorious and the Party proponent doth allege and propound as before.

Sentence handed down

... that the said Elizabeth Welch did sometime in the year 1827 enter the service of the said Thomas Cooke Kemp at Eastmeon aforesaid did reside and live in the House of the said Thomas Cooke Kemp in the capacity of a servant from the said year of 1827 until sometime after Michaelmas 1831 And this was and is true public and notorious. ...

... do pronounce and declare that the said Elizabeth Welch did in the year months and place in the said Libel mentioned or some or one of them contrary to the manners and the Bond of Charity publicly and maliciously in an Angry reproachful and invidious manner defame the said Thomas Cooke Kemp and maliciously say publish and report the seveal scandalous reproachful and defamatory words in the said libel mention tending to the infamy hurt and diminution of the Estate good name and reputation of the said Thomas Cooke Kemp. Wherefore we do pronounce decree and declare that the said Elizabeth Welch ought to be duly and canonically corrected and punished according to the Law in that behalf provided for her so great excess and rashness in the premises and be forced and compelled to reclaim such defamatory words and to the restitution of the good name of the said TCK and desist from such defamatory words for the future, And we do also pronounce and declare the said Elizabeth Welch be enjoined and compelled to perform a salutarey penance according to her demerits for her excess aforesaid And we do also pronounce and declare that the said Elizabeth Welch ought to be and we do condemn her in lawful costs.

Note: There is no suggestion that Welch was lying in her very explicit allegation against the Vicar, and the sentence is very slight

Appendix 5. Tithe Apportionments

1851 East Meon Introduction

Apportionment of the Rent Charge in lieu of Tithes in the Parish of East Meon in the county of Southampton

Whereas an Award of Rent Charge in lieu of Tithes in the Parish of East Meon in the County of Southampton on the fourteenth Day of March in the Year One Thousand Eight Hundred and fifty one, confirmed by the Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales, of which Award with the Schedule thereon comprised the following is a copy:-

Know all Men by these Presents that I William Wakefore Attree of the Middle Temple Barister at Law having been duly appointed and sworn as Assistant Tithe Commissioner attending to the provisions of the Act for the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales and having been also duly appointed to ascertain and award the Total Sum to be paid by way of Rent Charge instead of the tithes of the parish of East Meon (&c) do hereby Award as follows that is to say.

Whereas I have held divers Meetings in the said parish touching the matter aforesaid of which meetings due notice was given for the information of all Landowners and Titheowners of the said parish,

And whereas I have duly considered all the allegations and proofs tendered to me by all parties interested and have made all enquiries touching the premised subject that appeared to me to be necessary.

And whereas I find that the undermentioned Lands of the said parish are by prescription or other lawful means exempt from the payment of all Tithes, that is to say

All those lands called or known as the Manor Farm otherwise Court Farm containing by estimation seven hundred and seventy eight acres two roods and eight perches of Land

And all that farm called or known by the name of Fairfield Farm containing by estimation eight hundred and eighty four acres three roods and thirty three perches of Land

And all that farm called or known by the name of Hiden Farm containing by estimation two hundred and twenty seven acres two roods and five perches of Land.

And all that farm called or known as Park Farm containing by estimation four hundred and forty one acres of Land

And all that farm called or known by the name of Church Farm containing by estimation Five hundred and five acres three rood and thirty three perches of Land

All which said Lands and Farms are distinguished by well known meters (?) and bounds and of the whole whereof the Lord Bishop of Winchester in right of his See is the proprietor. And also the Vicarial Glebe Land of the said parish containing by estimation Fifteen Acres.

And whereas I find that the Titheable Lands of the said parish contain by estimation Eight Thousand two hundred and forty eight Acres which are cultivated and used as follows, that is to say

Five thousand seven hundred and sixty nine Acres as Arable Land

Five hundred and thirty one Acres as Meadow or Pasture

Eight hundred and forty four Acres as Woodland

Seventy Acres as Homesteads and Gardens

And One thousand and thirty four Acres as Downs, Roads and Waste

And whereas I find that all the said Titheable Lands of the said parish are liable to the payment of all manner of Tithes in kind

Corn, Grain, Lamb, Wool, Wood and Apples arising from or accruing due upon all the said Lands in the Tythings of Ramsden, Meon, Oxenbourne, Langrish, Bordeans and Riplington in the said parish.

And that John Bonham Carter of Petersfield in the said County Esquire holds Leases of the said Tithes arising from or accruing due upon the Titheable lands in the Tithings of Ramsdean and of Meon under the said Bishop.

And that John Christmas of Oxenbourne in the said parish Esquire holds a Lease of the said Tithes arising from or accruing due upon the Titheable lands in the Tithing of Oxenbourne under the said Bishop.

And that Sir William Hylton Jollife Baronet holds from the said Bishop a Lease of the said tithes arising from or accruing due upon the Titheable lands within the Tything of Langrish and within the Lower part or Division of the said tithing of Bordean and from or upon Thirty five Acres of Land whereof the Honorable Thomas William Gage is the proprietor and Twenty eight acres belonging to James Barnard the situtaion of which last mentioned Lands with respect to Tythings cannot be exactly defined but which lands ae well known by (meter?) and bounds.

And that the Devisees of the Will of the late John Cornthwaite Hector hold a Lease of the said Tithes arising from or accruing due upon the Titheable lands in the upper part or Division the Tithing of Bordean under the said Bishop.

And that the Right Honorable Viscount Gage holds a Lease of the said Tithes arising from or accruing due upon the Titheable lands of the said Township of Riplington under the said Bishop.

And whereas I find that the Vicar of the said parish for the time being is entitled to all the Tithes both Great and Small arising from or accruing due upon all the Titheable lands within the Tythings of Westbury Peake and Comb in the said pairsh. And is also entitled to all the Tithes other than the Tithes of Corn, Grain, Lamb, Wool, Wood and Apple, arising from or accruing due uon all the other Titheable Lands of the said parish.

And whereas due notice was given me in the manner required by the said Act and the Acts for the amendment thereof to value the Tithes of all the Lands of the said parish which are cultivated as Hop Grounds separately.

And whereas I find that the Vicar of the said parish for the time being is entitled to the Tithes of all Hops arising from or acruing upon any of the Titheable Lands in the said parish.

Now know ye that the said William Wakeford Attree DO hereby Award that the Annual sum of ninety pounds by way of Ordinary Rent Charge shall be paid to the said John Bonham Carter his executors and assigns during the continuance of his said lease of Tithes arising from or accruing due upon the Titheable Lands within the said Tything of Meon and efrom the expiration or other determination thereof to the said Bishop of Winchester and his successors instead of all the Tithes of Corn, Grain, Lamb, Wool, Wood and Apples arising from or accruing due on all the Titheable lands of the said Tything of Meon.

And that the Annual sum of One hundred and ninety pounds by way of Ordinary Rent Charge shall be paid to the said John Bonham Carter his executors administrators and assigns during the continuance of his said Lease of Tithes arising from and accruing due upon the Titheable lands of the said Tything of Ramsden and from and after the expiration or other determination of the said Lease then to the said Bishop and his successors instead of all the Tithes of Corn, Grain, Lamb, Wool, Wood and Apples arising from or accruing due upon all the Titheable Lands of the said Tything of Ramsden.

And that the Annual sum of Five hundred and seventy pounds by way of Ordinary Rent Charge shall be paid to the said John Christmas his executors administrators and assigns during the continuance of his said Lease of Tithes arising from and accruing due upon the Titheable lands of the said Tything of Ramsden and from and after the expiration or other determination of the said Lease then to the said Bishop and his successors instead of all the Tithes of Corn, Grain, Lamb, Wool, Wood and Apples arising from or accruing due upon all the Titheable Lands of the said Tything of Oxenbourne.

And that the Annual sum of One hundred and sixteen pounds by way of Ordinary Rent Charge shall be paid to the Devisees in trust under the Will of the late John Cornthwaite Hector their executors administrators and assigns during the continuance of his said and from and after the expiration or other determination of the said Lease then to the said Bishop and his successors instead of all the Tithes of Corn, Grain, Lamb, Wool, Wood and Apples arising from or accruing due upon all the Titheable Lands of the said Upper Division or part of the said Tything of Bordean.

And that the Annual sum of Two hundred and sixty five pounds by way of Ordinary Rent Charge shall be paid to the said Sir William Hylton Joliffe his executors administrators and assigns during the continuance of his said Lease of Tithes arising from and accruing due upon the Titheable lands of the said Tything of Ramsden and from and after the expiration or other determination thereof to the said Bishop and his successors instead of all the Tithes of Corn, Grain, Lamb, Wool, Wood and Apples arising from or accruing due upon all the Titheable Lands of the said Tything of Langrish and the said Lower Division of part of the said Tything of Bordean and the said Thirty five Acres belonging to the said Honorable Thomas William Gage and the said Twenty eight Acres belonging to the said James Barnard.

And that the annual sum of Two hundred pounds by way of Ordinary Rent Charge shall be paid to the said Viscount Gage his executors administrators and assigns during the continuance of his said Lease. And from and after the expiration or other determination of the said Lease then to the said Bishop and his successors instead of all the Tithes of Corn, Grain, Lamb, Wool, Wood and Apples arising from or accruing due upon all the Titheable Lands of the said Tything of Riplington..

And that the annual sum of Six hundred and eighty pounds by way of Ordinary Rent Charge shall be paid to the Vicar of the said parish for the time being instead of all the Tithes both great and small arising or accruing due upon the Titheable lands within the said Tythings of Westbury Peake and Comb instead of all the Tithes of Corn, Grain, Lamb, Wool, Wood and Apples arising from or accruing due upon all the Titheable Lands of the said Parish.

And I do Hereby Award that all the said Rent Charges shall commence and be payable from the first day of October next preceding the Confirmation of the Apportionment of the said Rent Charges.

And I do Assign such parts of the Parish as are titheable to be a District within which the undermentioned extraordinary charge upon Lands cultivated as hop gardens shall prevail.

And I do further Award that the Titheable Lands therein which are now or may be hereafter as Hop Gardens shall be charged with and pay to the said Vicar for the time being the further additional sum of Thirteen shillings and four pence per imperial Acre and so in proportion for any quantity less than an Acre by way of Extraordinay Charge so long as they shall be so cultivated.

And whereas no part of the said Vicarial Rent Charge has been awarded in lieu or on account of any tithes arising from or accruing due upon any holding of less than Forty perches. I do hereby direct and Award that no part of the said Vicarial Rent Charge shall be apportioned on any holding of less extent than forty perches.

In Testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand this Twentieth day of February in the year of our Lord One thousand eight hundred and fifty one.

(Signed) Wm Wakeford Attree

Now I Charles Osborn of Fareham in the County of Southampton having been appointed to apportion the Total Sum Awarded to be paid by way of Rent Charge in lieu of Tithes amongst the several Lands of the said Parish of East Meon Do hereby apportion the Rent Charge as follows:

1841 Froxfield Apportionment – extracts

TNA IR 18/8995

The Lord Bishop of Winchester in right of his See as Appropriator claims the Great Tithes of the whole Parish except as those lands claimed by the vicar, which tithes are under a Lease renewable to the Trustees under the Will of the late Cornthwaite John Hector of Petersfield ... names of trustees.

The Rev Thomas Cook Kemp as Vicar claims the Tithes both Great and Small arising from certain lands containing by estimation a230 – r1 – p22 and the Vicarial Glebe Lands and also the Small ithes and also the Small Tithes (except the Tithes of Lambs wool and Apples) and the Tithe of Hay of the residue of the Parish...

And whereas I find that the Vicar of the said Parish for the time being is entitled to all the Small Tithes other than the Tithes of Lambs, Wool and Apples arising from all the lands of the Said Parish and also to the tithes of Corn, Grain, Lambs wool and Apples arising from the Vicarial Glebe Lands and the illegible – a230 – r1 – p22 ...

The Vicar's average receipts for the seven years are ascertained and declared to have been £230 and no notice having been given for increase or decrease that sum has been awarded...

The Vicar takes the Tithes both Great and Small off the Glebe.

Notes: Once again, the Bishop has leased the greater tithes to a lay appropriator. The Vicar has presumably let the Glebe lands to a tenant, but claims the Great and Small tithes from them.
